Transco's Revenues Up 10 %

Houston, Texas -- With the gas pipeline industry facing an increasingly tight supply - demand situation, James B. Henderson, president of Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corporation, told stockholders at their annual meeting of the many approaches the company is taking toward increasing availability of gas to the 8,600-mile Texas - New York system.

Transco's operating revenues rose 10% in the first quarter and net income was up 12%. Earnings applicable to common stock after preferred dividends were equal to 39¢ per share, compared with 37¢ a year ago.

Mr. Henderson said that because of soaring demand for natural gas due to population growth, industrial development and air pollution control, Transco has taken a multi-phase approach to solving the gas shortage problem:

* With its customers, Transco is working out a plan to advance funds for exploration to producers.

* Transco has agreed to advance funds to a major oil company to cover exploratory drilling costs on deep test wells offshore Louisiana involving 50,000 acres of leases.

* The Company is investigating conversion of oil into high-BTU natural gas compatible with the present system gas, and is studying the possible location of oil-gas plants at points along the system. Also being investigated is coal gasification.

* Transco is exploring the possibility of importing foreign liquefied natural gas, particularly from Venezuela.

* Transco also continues to contract for available new reserves within reach of its pipeline system.

Two by fours were jammed through the diesel cabs and scattered over a wide area. Engineer on the damaged freight was W. W. Baldwin of Lynchburg. The damaged engines and cars had been shifted to the right hand track by the time this photo was taken.

All the local students are 8th graders competing in the Novice division, in most cases, against upper classmen. Headmaster Walter H. Carson, said he is rightfully proud of the Lee Academy pupils.
